"Passage" by Dann Nardi

Dann Nardi is an artist from Normal, Illinois, who uses common materials such as concrete and plywood to build his work in various scales and contexts, to elicit architectural references and subtle organic complexities.

"From the first public project created in 1982, I have been consistently focused on integrating the work into its environment. It has been my intent to establish a strong physical relationship between the art and its environment, guided by equal concern to concept and context. I am continually looking for ways to "blur the line" between my constructed forms and the space they occupy. In an exterior situation my primary focus is to shape ground space and incorporate earth as both form and material, whenever the opportunity exists."
