

Ancient Pottery — The still-life illustration above features several Pilling figurines, a petroglyph of what is assumed to be a sheep, and two pieces of pottery. Though this culture was ancient, they weren't without their inventions. For example the tall piece of pottery shown above is called a "strap-handled jug." What's unique about this jug is that the bottom is rounded so it can be pushed into the sand to keep water cool ... sort of the Fremont's version of refrigerated water!

Eating stone-dust with corn and drinking water from a jug that was cooled only by the earth — it's hard to imagine the hardships these people had to go through to survive as long as they did over a thousand years ago!
